

Trump’s “Big Beautiful Bill” Bombs in the Polls

di Curtis Fric

As Trump tries to push his One Big Beautiful Bill through Congress, the American people don’t seem particularly thrilled about what it entails. Polling from several firms reveals that Americans are broadly opposed to the bill, as even the most favorable poll still shows strong opposition.

A Fox News poll conducted by Beacon and Shaw found that 38% of Americans support the bill, while 59% oppose it. Support only declines from there, as YouGov reports 35% in favor, while Quinnipiac and Pew Research both found just 29% support.

Three of the four polls show opposition to the bill above 50%, except for Pew, which still finds 49% opposed to the One Big Beautiful Bill Act.

What's especially notable is that Republicans aren't uniformly in support of the bill, as one might expect. Support among Republicans ranges from a high of 73% to a low of 56%, suggesting many on the right aren't sold on the bill's contents.

Independents are firmly against it, with opposition ranging from 51% to 73%. Among Democrats, support never climbs above 10%.

Support for individual policy proposals within the bill varies significantly, as we'll explore next.
